Following is President Harding's address in full:

SECRETARY WALLACE AND MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE—It is an occasion of the greatest satisfaction to me that Secretary Wallace's invitation has been so widely and cordially accepted. I contess the firm belief that in the public life of a people so intelligent as the American nation most problems may be regarded as well on the way to solution when they are once reduced to their simplest terms and generally understood. This conference was called with the aim to bring about such a general understanding of the critical situation now confronting American agriculture.

We all understand that this conference is not a legislative body. Its recommendations will require to be written into the statute books by other authorities, or applied in administration, after sanction by those who must assume responsibility. But we do confidently anticipate that the considerations here had will be helpful and fluminating to those immediately responsible for the formulation of public pelley in dealing with these problems. Therefore, it has seemed to me, I can make no more appropriate observation than that your work here will be of value precisely as you address yourselves to the realities, the matters of fact, the understanding of conditions as they are, and the proposal of feasible and practicable methods for dealing with those conditions.

Concerning the grim reality of the present crisis in agriculture there can be no differences of opinion among informed people. The depressions and discouragements are not peculiar to agriculture, and I think it fair to say agriculture, and I think it fair to say there could have been no avoidance of a great slump from wartime excesses to the hardships of readjustment. We can have no helpful understanding by assuming that agriculture suffers alone, but we may fairly recognize the fundamental difficulties which accentuate the agricultural discouragements and menace the healthful life of this basic and absolutely necessary industry.

I do not need to tell you or the country of the supreme service that the farmer rendered our nation and the world during the war. Feculiar circumstances placed our allies in Europe, as well as our own country, in a resisting of neculiar and unprecea position of peculiar and unprecedented dependence on the American farmer. With his labor supply limited and in conditions which made producing costs high beyond all precedent, the farmer rose to the emergency. He did everything that was
